Dear Jim:

Thomas Brothers of 2560 Glendale Boulevard in Los Angeles sells a booklet of Los Angeles county maps for three dollars. On page 35 of that booklet in the lower right hand side is shown Elysian Park and at the bottom of the page you will find the name Chavez Ravine.

You will note that this is the general area where Hollywood Freeway crosses Harbor Freeway and ties up with Santa Anna Freeway and San Bernadino Freeway. Also there are quick connection roads to Sunset and Glendale Boulevards.

On page 44 of the booklet just to the right of the center on the top you will find Chavez Ravine Road. This particular map shows the freeways more clearly. There are about four hundred acres of sandy hills and undeveloped land in this area behind the Police Barracks.

I wish you would drive out to the location at your convenience and study it. This happens to be the only spot immediately adjacent to one freeway but within a short distance of the intersections of the remaining highways.

When you return to New York, we will have some interesting observations to compare.

Sincerely,

Walter F. O'Malley
